A Serious Accident.

The dangerous target rifle came near ending the life of John McGraw, a grocer living out Boggs' run, on Saturday evening. While walking in the back yard of his home, he was struck in the neck by a stray bullet, supposed to have been fired from a target rife in the possession of two Benwood boys named Ruiman and Crambletree, who were shooting at a target some distance away. Dr. Myers, of South Wheeling, and Dr. Alley, of Benwood, attended Mr. McGraw, but were unable to extract the builet after considerable probing. The physicians found on examination, that the builet entered at the left side of the neck, striking one of the vertebrae bonce and glanding toward the jaw. The wound, which was two inches deep, bled profusely. The physicians have hopes for Mr. McGraw's recovery. His escape from a more serious wound is fortunate, indeed. neck by a stray bullet, supposed

The process pursued by M. Gabelle in producing his pictures in gold has b explained by him to the French Photographic Society. The combined toning nd fixing bath is composed as follows Old and exhausted tone-fixing bath, 750 cc.-new bath ((alum 30 grams, hypo 3,000 grams, acetate of lead one gram water 1,000 grams) 250 cc.; 1 per cent chloride of gold solution 8 cc., says the New York Sun. This mixture is allowed to remain at rest for two days before it is used, and the toning in it must be long and complete, so as to re-place practically all the silver in the image with gold; 20 to 30 minutes sufice in the toning bath, and, after about three hours' washing the prints are im three hours' washing the prints are immersed in a weak solution of mercuric chloride, prepared by mixing one volume of a saturated solution with twenty volume of water; the bleaching of the silver image is tolerably rapid in this solution, the gold toning alone remaining. A gold-toned silver print, if treated with mercuric chloride, becomes bleached so far as the silver image is concerned, and the remaining gold image may be red, purple or violet. According to the experiments of Piles and Weiss, placques of wood can be

According to the experiments of Pliva and Weiss, placques of wood can be printed upon by the action of light through paper, tin, fabric or a negative. To prevent the pattern from moving it should be fixed to the wood in one or two places. The whole is then laid in the printing frame. Splints should be used to provent the wood from splitting and warping. The exposure to the sun should be from eight to fourteen days. When the wood has been sufficiently browned, the resulting design may be fixed either by polishing or by a coating of varnish or wax.

The numerous experiments made show that for this work wood made from trees with pointed leaves, such as pines, is most suitable, as after exposure it assumes a yellowish-brown tone which shines beautifully like gold, which becomes especially strong after polishing and which cannot be obtained by any other etching or burning method. The drawing is sharper and clearer, says the "Practical Photographer," than in paintins, and the whole effect is very pleasing.

Now that a great deal of the out-doorer for the camera enthusiastic

Now that a great deal of the out-door work for the camera enthusiastic is lessened the thought turn more to indoor and flashlight work, and the following hints may prove helpful to those who are not so far advanced as to scorn advice. In selecting the background get one of a rough material, which will to a great extent avoid violent shadows by absorbing the light, and in getting it procure enough to trail on the floor and make a continuous floor covering. Now place the sitter about three feet from the background. This method enables rich textures of fabrics to be especially well produced. Now as to the flashlight proper: Place it about eight feet from the floor, so that it will cast a slight proper. So we have a simple standard and a tright angles to the camera. Heavy shadows may be relieved by placing a white sheet as a reflector at right angles to the subject on the opposite side from the lamp, of course. A Rembrandt effect may be produced by placing the lamp in a box slightly behind and almost at right angles to the sitter, with the open end pointing thereto. Conduct development so as to avoid density, and if a pyro developer be used it should be diluted, and weak in pyro and bromide.

One of the richest and rarest of com edies that is now being presented the American public is "Other People's Money," billed for the Opera House tonight, in which that inimitable comedian, Hennessy Leroyle, assumes the stellar role. The dialogue is witty and highly interesting itself, and full of epigrams. Hennessy Leroyle is all that the most exacting could desire in his masterly conception and consumnate enacting of Hutchinson Hopper, the jovial but scheming, grasping money-get ting old stockbroker, who would try to accomplish any deal to possess other people's money so long as it did not land him in prison. As the play re-volves around the character he has multitudinous schemes of securing wealth by advising and fleecing his clients, and the role turnishes a splen-did vehicle for good comedy work. "In Atlantic City."

"In Atlantic City" will be the at-traction at the Grand the first half of this week. The piece will be preten this week. The piece will be pretentiously mounted, the company larger in numbers and more conspicuous for its talent, and the comedy, music and dancing will be up to the times in every particular. Frank M. Wills is an original comedian whose work has given him an enviable standing as an entertainer. Miss Estelia Wills is a very handsome young woman, possessing high comedy talent and a strong cultivated singing voice, and is afforded ample scope for the display of her varied talents. All the characters in "In Atlantic City" are so well differentiated that they combine in presenting an effective and harmonious whole. "Uncle Tom's Cabin."

The production of "Uncle Tom's Cab-in," which will be given at the Opera in," which will be given at the Opera House, matines and night, December 16, is on a scale of magnificence never before witnessed in this city. Among the scenic effects used is the gorgeous Apotheosis, and the last scene, the ascent of Eva to the realms of bliss, borne by angels; the pearly gates and stairway to the home beyond the skies; the Ohio river in mid-winter by moonlight; a southern paradise at sunset; allegorical scenes, typical of the birth of liberty and blessing of little children; the wierd Rocky Pass; the realistic cotton plantation. "The Turtle."

"The Turtle" is announced for next Thursday evening at the Opera House. It will be presented by its notable cast direct from the phenomenally successful engagement at the Manhattan Theatre in New York. "The Turtle" will be seen in so few towns outside of the larger cities that the local management is to be congratulated in having been fortunate amough to secure this organization. The piece will be presented in identically the same manner as in the metropolis, no pains or expense having been spared in the ambituon of the management to make the tour notable.

"The Octoroons."

John W. Isham's "Octoroons," which will be here on Thursday, Friday and Saturday, at the Grand Opera House, have among the large company a dozen whose talent is far above the average, both among the singers and specialty artists. The programme is a long, novel and interesting one. The opening sketch called "'-11-77," is one designed to set hiarity a-going and fully carries out its purpose. The excellent ollowhich immediately follows attests the manager's eye for the beautiful, as some of the most charming pictures, or fancy stage groupings, are in its ensemble. But for those who revel in choice songs, especially sketchers and choruses from the grand and comic operas, the finale will be the par excellent, when thirty minutes of choice selections will be rendered. Saturday, at the Grand Opera House, Robert Mantell.

Romantic Robert B. Mantell will be at the Opera House next Friday night, December 15. The dagger that figured so prominently in his new play, "The so prominently in his new play, "The Dagger and the Cross," is one of the most valuable and beautiful weapons ever carried on the stage. The jeweled hilt is of wrought gold and the blade of finest tempered Toledo steel. Mr. Mantell asked Manager M. W. Hanley last spring to watch for a suitable dagger, but none was found. One day, however, a package came to the actor from a New England man, a friend of long acquaintance. In it was the dagger now used in the play, accompanied by a note saying that the sender had read Joseph Hatton's great novel, "The Dagger and the Cross," and, hearing that Mr. Mantell was to produce a dramatization of the book, he begged to present the actor with a weapon which had been an heirloom for many years.
